Specialist in Endocrinology, Finland

This is an opportunity to work as a specialist in endocrinology in a close-knit Nordic healthcare environment, while living in a peaceful island community surrounded by nature and the sea.

About the Island:
This Nordic island is home to approximately 30,000 residents and offers a safe, peaceful and family-friendly environment. With its beautiful archipelago, clean air and easy access to outdoor activities such as hiking, sailing and cycling, the island provides excellent opportunities for an active lifestyle outside of work.

For professionals considering relocation with their families, the island offers schools, daycare services and a welcoming community within a compact geographical area.

About the Role:
As a specialist in endocrinology, you will have a broad and varied clinical role, assessing, treating and following patients with a range of endocrine and metabolic conditions.

The position requires a physician with broad specialist competence who is comfortable working independently and taking responsibility for clinical assessments and treatment decisions.

Your responsibilities may include:
Assessment, diagnosis, treatment and follow-up of patients with endocrine and metabolic disorders
Management of conditions within areas such as diabetes, thyroid disorders, osteoporosis and calcium metabolism, pituitary and adrenal disorders
Evaluation and follow-up of patients with both common and more complex endocrine conditions
Providing specialist consultations and clinical guidance when needed
Working independently while being an active part of the wider medical team
Close collaboration with colleagues across the medical department and other relevant specialties
Contributing specialist expertise to the continued development of the service
A Broad and Independent Specialist Role

As the healthcare organization serves the island's population, we are looking for an endocrinologist with a broad clinical profile who feels confident managing a varied patient population.

You should be comfortable making independent clinical decisions while also valuing close collaboration with colleagues. The endocrinology service works within a smaller team, with close cooperation with the wider medical department and other healthcare professionals.

The position therefore suits a specialist who appreciates both professional autonomy and the opportunity to work closely with colleagues across different areas of internal medicine.

Requirements:
We are looking for a specialist who:
Holds an EU-recognised qualification in endocrinology
Has broad clinical competence within endocrinology
Has experience in the assessment, diagnosis, treatment and follow-up of endocrine and metabolic conditions
Is confident working independently and taking responsibility for clinical decisions
Has a broad and flexible approach to specialist work
Enjoys working in a smaller team with close multidisciplinary and cross-specialty collaboration
Has strong communication skills and a patient-centered approach
Communicates well in English and is motivated to learn Swedish

Why Consider This Opportunity?
Broad specialist role: Work with a varied range of endocrine and metabolic conditions.
Professional autonomy: Take an independent role while having close collaboration with colleagues across the medical department.
Close-knit environment: Become part of a smaller team where your specialist expertise makes a tangible contribution.
Nordic island lifestyle: Enjoy a safe, family-friendly community surrounded by nature and the sea.

We offer:
Personal and ongoing support from your dedicated recruiter
Assistance with authorization and specialist recognition when required
Support throughout the relocation process
Assistance related to accommodation and practical relocation matters
Support for accompanying family members
Access to language training with a private tutor via Teams or Skype.
